

Proposed Policy for University Teaching by Graduate Students

IU School of Education, IUPUI

To preserve the integrity of graduate education at the IU School of Education at Indianapolis, graduate students will not be permitted to serve as the primary or sole instructor of a graduate-level course. This policy does not prohibit graduate students from co-teaching graduate courses under the direct supervision of doctoral faculty, who will be the faculty of record. Co-teaching is strongly supported so graduate students can experience teaching graduate and undergraduate courses. Graduate students are permitted to serve as the primary instructor for undergraduate courses, provided that they have the appropriate background content preparation and experiences for the assigned course or courses.